I am a Swiss-Mexican photographer whose practice has evolved from street photography toward abstraction, translating external observations into explorations of intrinsic sensations. Shaped by early and frequent visits to museums, a passion for auteur cinema, and visually creative parents who instilled in me from childhood an understanding of light, composition, and concept, I developed a visual language that aspires to go beyond documentation toward sensation.

For me, photography functions as a form of therapy— a means to communicate what remains difficult to articulate through language. Certain emotions resist translation into words; verbalising them would mean losing their essence. The camera becomes the instrument for preserving what speech cannot contain, allowing these states to exist in their original, non-articulated form.
